

Mr. Masakuni TANIMOTO opened the Tokyo Peacebuilding Forum 2019. He asked the participants to join him in paying tribute to Madame Sadako OGATA who had passed away. He then showed video messages received from Nobel Peace Prize Winner President Jose Ramos-Horta, Mr. Domenec DeVessa of Spain, member of the European Parliament and Prof. Math Noortmann Executive Director of the Academic Council on the UN System (ACUNS).

Mr. Masakuni Tanimoto, Secretary-General of the Global Peacebuilding Association of Japan.

In his video message, the 1996 Nobel Prize Laureate and Former President of Timor-Leste José Ramos-Horta expressed his concern that the United Nations had been sidelined and unable to mobilize international good will and discharge its responsibilities in addressing humanitarian and security crises. The solutions to these challenges, he suggested, could be found only when the major powers get together, enhance their mutual understanding, build bridges and achieve consensus in order to address the global challenges. However, he said it would not be realistic to expect the major powers to get gather and mobilize international efforts jointly. President Ramos-Horta then mentioned as good news that a small country of Timor-Leste had achieved best relationship with neighboring countries of Australia as well as Indonesia which has achieved the consolidation of democracy. ASEAN was becoming a strong regional institution fostering peace and stability in the region.

In a second video message, Mr. Domenec DeVessa of Spain, member of the European Parliament, referred to the need for more multilateral regional approach in dealing with transnational issues such as climate change, migrations, digitalization and inequality. He also referred to the need for improving the capacity of the United Nations to deal with global issues.

He found it desirable to carry out a constitutional reform of the United Nations with a view to guarding the efficacy of federalist movement which had made possible the integration of the European countries. In particular, Mr. DeVessa expressed his view that a United Nations Parliamentary Assembly should be established as Europe had created the EU Parliament.

In his video message to the participants of the Tokyo Peacebuilding Forum 2019, Prof. Math Noortmann Executive Director of the Academic Council on the UN System (ACUNS) said that peace was no longer the mere absence of violence. Peace and peacebuilding are increasingly connected to other global governance issues such as climate change, migration, poverty, transnational crimes. Peace is the sum of the freedom from fear, the freedom for want and the freedom to live in dignity. The complexity of our world and the turbulence provided by globalization are creating a fertile ground for populist politicians to offer easy solutions. They are trying to dismantle the multilateral system.

United Nations Secretary-General António Guterres is calling for reformed and invigorated multilateralism. Multilateralism and peace are interconnected, but the concern for peace and multilateralism should not be confined to the intergovernmental debate. There is need for a global academic debate. ACUNS seeks to facilitate such a global dialogue as a credible and trustworthy partner of the UN. As the UN will celebrate its 75th anniversary in 2020, the ACUNS Annual Meeting in London (25-27 June) facilitates practitioners, scholars and researchers as well as international civil servants to enter into such an international dialogue on multilateralism, partnership and peace.

Ambassador Ina Lepel of the Federal Republic of Germany

Ambassador Ina Lepel of the Federal Republic of Germany started her keynote speech by presenting a Germany perspective on the role of the United Nations in peacebuilding and global governance. Germany viewed multilateralism as an essential approach to achieve sustainable peace and wanted to strengthen the capacity of the UN in global governance in general and crisis prevention and peacebuilding in particular. Both the UN system and national systems of donors/contributors need integrated approaches and must overcome institutional silos in order to enable successful peacebuilding. The UN system is best placed to have a leading role in international peacebuilding. Being a Security Council member for 2018-2019, Germany had developed a policy in the UN Security Council aimed at better linking the Security Council and the Peacebuilding Commission. The UN Peacebuilding Commission (PBC) should strengthen its partnership with EU and other regional institutions. Germany supported SG Guterres' approach of "Sustaining Peace". According to the German view, the PBC should present a clear agenda rather than a wish list to the Security Council. The Peacebuilding Fund should also provide more knowledge from the field to inspire the Peacebuilding debate.

Germany considered the PBC review due in 2020 an important opportunity for improvements in the PBC system and supported the Secretary-General's recommendations made in January 2018. According to Germany's view, key elements for review were prevention as well as transitions and financing. In these areas, Ambassador Lepel considered important the role of UN Resident Coordinators and their country teams. To achieve successful transition, the UN side and countries concerned should have strategic discussions and establish a common understanding of what needed to be done. National governments should set the priority for transition, while the PBC should provide targeted inputs and concrete suggestions. On the financing issue, she noted that necessary financial resources should also come from relevant partners such as the World Bank and expressed her hope that more partners would be engaged in financing, as stories of successful transition became better known.

Finally, she mentioned that Germany endeavoured an integrated approach within its own government by bringing together Ministries of Foreign Affairs, Development, Interior and Defense and mentioned the role of German Police in the transition period between peacekeeping and peacebuilding. Germany had spent 600 million euro in 2018 for crisis prevention, stabilization and peacebuilding and had produced strategic guidelines on transitional justice, security sector reform and rule of law support. She stressed that Germany considered that the UN has the legitimacy and should play a central role in global governance, while there was a need to improve its management efficiency and effectiveness. She added that Japan was an important partner in all those endeavors, especially when it came to making multilateral organizations more inclusive and effective. She also briefly touched upon the Alliance for Multilateralism launched by France and Germany.

Ambassador Laurent PIC of France

Ambassador of France to Japan, H.E. Mr. Laurent PIC said that French contributions to UN peacekeeping operations (PKOs) reflects France`s strong commitment to the peaceful resolution of conflicts. The Department of Peace Operations headed by a senior French official, Jean-Pierre Lacroix, was carrying out vital peacekeeping activities. With threats to peace in the world proliferating and crises growing increasingly complex, France provided the UN with several hundred troops that were deployed on the ground in several peacekeeping operations.

With threats to peace around the world proliferating, the number of UN peacekeeping forces has increased significantly: while there were some 12,000 peacekeepers in 1996 and 20,000 in 2000, that number has risen to more than 100,000 in 2019. France hopes to expand, reform and modernize PKOs to make them better suited to 21st-century conflicts.

With 738 peacekeepers deployed worldwide in 8 PKOs, France is the second-largest supplier of troops of the five permanent members of the Security Council. Several thousand French soldiers are also deployed on a national basis and provide daily support to peacekeeping operations.

France is the only UN Member State to deploy a national force in support of peacekeeping operations. In Mali, the Barkhane force supports MINUSMA in the fight against jihadist terrorism in the region. In the Central African Republic, the Sangaris force provided support for MINUSCA until 2016.

As a permanent member of the Security Council, France participates fully, continuously and with conviction in the preparation of mandates and in the follow-up of peacekeeping operations. Peacekeeping operations` mandates are decided at the Security Council in New York through Council resolutions. If appropriate, these operations` renewal and the size of the forces to be deployed may also be decided there.

France is the 6th contributor to the budget of peacekeeping operations. France supports an evolution of the peacekeeping budget to align with transformations occurring in the field of peacekeeping and render peacekeeping operations more modern and more efficient: France thereby defends measures destined to reinforce contingents' safety or investments which enable the deployment of new technologies in the field (drones, projection means).

Cooperation with regional organizations such as the African Union is a priority for France. France is training around 30,000 African soldiers every year in order to support their deployment in a PKO. With this in mind, France hosted a UN Training of Trainers session in Paris in February 2017. This training session followed on from the Paris conference on peacekeeping in a French-speaking environment in October 2016, which focused on language training and the importance of interaction with the local populations. On the ground, 320 voluntary aid workers contribute to the training of contingents deployed in PKOs. Given that many of the PKOs are deployed in French-speaking environments, there are 74 French-language teachers working with the contingents.

France is also committed to defending the exemplary nature, and accountability, of peacekeeping operations: it has supported a series of measures aiming to reaffirm the zero-tolerance policy towards sexual abuse and to give the UN Secretary-General the tools necessary to fight against such abuses.

Former UN Under-Secretary-General Yasushi Akashi acknowledges with great respect the German and French contributions in the area of peacebuilding and peacekeeping

Mr. Yasushi Akashi, Former Under-Secretary-General of the United Nations

Referring to the statements made by Ambassador Lepel and Ambassador PIC, Mr. Akashi, the former UN Under-Secretary-General, began his comments by referring to his recent participation in the Tokyo-Beijing Forum held on October 26-27, 2019, in which Japan and China's collaboration was discussed. Mr. Akashi noted with great respect the German and French cooperation in the area of peacebuilding and peacekeeping, and emphasized that, because peacebuilding and peacekeeping is an endeavor without guarantee of success, realistic and pragmatic approach must be always adhered to. He noted that Germany has been particularly active in peacemaking through effective use of national experiences and regional interests as exemplified in its participation in Afghanistan, which had been outside the UN framework. Mr. Akashi explained that, with reference to France's unique role in Mali and Côte d'Ivoire, the role of French troops is consistent with the robust peacekeeping principle under Chapter 7 of the Charter and taking full advantage of French colonial experiences. He added that it was important to bear in mind the Brahimi Report of 2000, since it is based on many empirical wisdoms. Mr. Akashi was of the view that the present UN Security Council structure should not be considered permanent, and a new type of collaboration should be looked at, particularly semi-permanent membership. He expressed the view that the UN should always remain a creative and pragmatic forum, enabling countries to contribute in different ways and work towards innovative and realistic dialogues on peacekeeping and peacemaking.

Following Mr. Yasushi Akashi, Professor SHINYO mentioned the need to establish the missing link between peacekeeping and peacebuilding operations and noted the importance of peacemaking during the cycle of conflict prevention, peacemaking, peacekeeping and peacebuilding.

Professor Takahiro SHINYO, Former Deputy Permanent Representative of Japan to the United Nations and Ambassador to Germany

Noting the statements made by German Ambassador Lepel on peacebuilding and French Ambassador PIC on peacekeeping operations, Professor SHINYO first mentioned the need to establish the missing link between peacekeeping and peacebuilding. He then noted the importance of peacemaking during the cycle of conflict prevention, peacemaking, peacekeeping and peacebuilding. He probed into the necessity of achieving and keeping peace through peacemaking and other political process and cited the case of Iran for which both Prime Minister Shinzo Abe and President Emmanuel Macron have been carrying out mediation.

Professor SHINYO commented secondly on the need to establish a close working relationship between the Peacebuilding Commission and not only the Security Council but also the General Assembly, ECOSOC and Human Rights Council. He also mentioned the need to link the activities related to sustainable development with sustainable peace. Thirdly, he indicated the role of disarmament for making sustainable peace and called for saving and allocating 10 percent of resources spent for armament which amount to $1.7 trillion. Fourthly, Professor SHINYO expressed his agreement with Mr. Akashi on the need for envisioning the reform of the Security Council in new perspective not constrained by the group of G4. He supported the French idea of non-use of veto in case of genocide and crime against humanity. The notion of Responsibility to Protect (R2P) should not only be conceived of militarily but politically for its use. Fifthly, he called for formation of the alliance for liberal multilateralism consisting of Germany, France, Japan and other likely minded nations. Finally, on the need to finance the UN operations, he emphasized that Member States including the United States should be held accountable for their payment to the membership dues.

Following the presentations and remarks by the discussants, the participants made comments and engaged in discussion.

Dr. Ai Kihara-Hunt, Associate Professor at the University of Tokyo

Dr. Ai Kihara-Hunt, Associate Professor at the University of Tokyo, agreed that the rule of law and police are the central part of peacebuilding. She mentioned that global governance is also necessary for experts working in global governance, and asked to Her Highness Ms. Lepel if she could share how Germany is doing it. She then asked His Highness Mr. Pic how France sees the link between sexual exploitation and abuse and peacebuilding, and also how cooperation between the UN, UN member States, and AU can cooperate on this matter.

Mr. Tadanori INOMATA, Former Ambassador of Japan to Costa Rica and Strategic Advisor, Nagasaki University

Ambassador Inomata, commenting on Ambassador Pic's remarks in defense of coalition approach conducive to global governance, pointed out the need to distinguish coalitions based on parochial interest from those in search of coherent norms and standards on global issues such as governance of multilateral environmental agreements including the Paris Agreement on climate change, the OECD consensus Principles on AI and Base Erosion and Profit Shifting (BEPS), the G7/G20 understanding on stable coins as well as the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) developed in EU. Ambassador Pic agreed to encourage such coalitions aimed at universal rule-making as exemplified by the French initiative in the UN General Assembly “Towards a Global Pact for the Environment” (A/RES/72/277 voted on 10 May 2018).

During the course of the remaining morning session, Messrs. Ken Inoue, Sumihiro Kuyama, Yang Yue, Vesselin Popovski, Arbenia Sopaji, Zhang Guihong, S.M. Sharei, Takaaki Mizuno, Kotaro Katsuki, and Katsumi Ishizuka made their comments and observations.

13:00-15:00 Thematic Sessions I

➤ Thematic session 1: “Peacebuilding and Media”

Coordinator/Moderator:

Takaaki MIZUNO, Professor, Kanda University of International Studies

Presenters:

Koji IGRASHI, Professor, Otsuma Women`s University

Makoto IGARASHI, Former Yangon Bureau Chief of the Asahi Shimbun

Discussant:

Ai KIHARA-HUNT, Associate Professor, University of Tokyo

Satoru KUROSAWA, Professor of Faculty of International Studies of Kyoritu Women`s University

Rapporteur:

Mio SATO, Representative of International Organization for Migration (IOM)

Professor Takaaki Mizuno of Kanda University of International Studies

Coordinator/Moderator, Professor Takaaki MIZUNO with his professional carrier as foreign correspondent for 30 years explained why we picked up this topic as following.

“The international mass media play a pivotal role in every aspect of peacebuilding process. When a humanitarian crisis caused by military conflict or famine in poor countries occurs, it is crucial for the international community to grasp the situation on the ground at an early stage and take necessary actions to prevent a potential human disaster. In order to warn international public opinion promptly at an early stage of the crisis (“early warning” function) and to encourage the quick response of concerning governments, NGOs, UN organizations (advocacy function), western mass-media have an enormous influence in shaping “international public opinion” which could be works as “soft power”. However, the angles and focuses of these media reports do not always meet the expectation from the relief organizations, not to mention of the concerning governments. That is because its “news value” can be judged by the media organizations in terms of the “relevance for their audiences”, not by the practical needs for peacebuilding process. As a result, those complaints and criticisms like “Given the intensity of a crisis, the news report is insufficient and victim’s voices are neglected”, “the reporters are biased and describe the situation not accurately,” “Focusing only shocking and sensational scenes, they neglect steady progress in peacebuilding process,” are almost always raised among practitioners of NGOs and international organizations on the ground.

This session looked into the cases of news coverages of Africa's humanitarian crisis and Myanmar's democratization movement as examples of how the major Japanese newspaper covered these events and what was missing in retrospect. Veteran journalists who covered these events told tell their stories.

【Relevant questions】

- 1) How best and to what extent the foreign media and humanitarian organizations should cooperate for the purpose of early warning of emerging human crisis?
- 2) How different in their priorities as “witnesses and voices from the ground”?
- 3) For practitioners of peacebuilding, what is the most desirable way to work with media in order to promote and advocate their cases?

Koji Igarashi, who covered military conflicts and humanitarian crisis in Ethiopia, Somalia and other disasters in Africa early 1990s, shared his study on media reporting on the genocide in Rwanda. He pointed out the news was almost neglected at an early stage because there were few Japanese correspondents in Africa, in case of Asahi Shimbun only one in Nairobi covers the whole sub-Sahara countries. Coincidentally as Nelson Mandela had become a new president of the South Africa republic, almost all the Western news reporters, including Japanese media, were absorbed with that single topic as a symbolic news for “new Africa” at that time. He quoted former SG Boutros Boutros-Ghali from his interview after he retired, that neither the UN nor the international community itself paid a due attention to the situation in Africa.”

Mr. Koji IGRASHI, Professor, Otsuma Women`s University and
Mr. Makoto IGARASHI, Former Yangon Bureau Chief of the Asahi Shimbun

Makoto Igarashi, Former Asahi Shimbun Yangon Bureau Chief, shared his long experience to cover political development of Myanmar. The summary of his presentation, titled “Covering Myanmar's democratization process --- How to avoid “good or bad” dichotomy in reporting foreign news” is following.

In the process of the Myanmar's democratization, both domestic and international media has played a significant role by intensively covering events happened under the military junta since 1988. The military junta seized power by suppressing the democracy movement led by Aung San Suu Kyi through various means like arbitrary detentions and tortures. Suu Kyi herself had been long under house arrest.

By covering these human rights violations, media reports prompted international reactions to pressure the military junta regime not to go too far. Facing the sanctions imposed by the international community, the military leaders finally decided to start democratic reforms. The peaceful power transfer in Myanmar, however incomplete it may be, is one of the historic events in modern Asia and beyond. It is obvious that without the role of media as a “mouthpiece” of democratic movement, such political power shift could not have happened.

In contrast to such a positive role played by the media, since 2016 when Aung San Suu Kyi has become the de fact leader of the country, this “honeymoon” relationship between media and “democratic movement” has seemed to be over. For especially western media, Aung San Suu Kyi is no longer a symbol of “democracy and human rights” rather a silent puppet of the powerful military regime. Some criticize that media focused too much on her personality without considering a real power balance in the nascent Myanmar government in which both military and civilians shares Some Word features can't be displayed in Google Docs and will be dropped if you make changes.

➤ Thematic session 2 “Peacebuilding and Global Governance: Theory and Practice”
Coordinator/Moderator:

Naoko KUMAGAI, Associate Professor, International University of Japan

Presenters

Koji SAKANE, Senior Director, Office for Peacebuilding and Reconstruction, Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA).

Kasumi ISHIZUKA, Professor, Kyoritsu University

Vanessa Abou Khali, Ph.D. Student Kobe University

Discussants:

Dong LIANG, Assistant Professor, China Foreign Affairs University, Beijing

Ken INOUE, Senior Adviser on Democratic Governance, JICA

Rapporteur: Elizabeth Gamarra, Rotary Fellow, ICU

Moderator Naoko KUMAGAI, Associate Professor, International University of Japan

Moderated by Professor Kumagai, there were three main presentations for the session titled "peacebuilding and global governance: theory and practice" - specifically how do we find a link between these two. And more broadly, how do we conceptualize global governance as a whole? MR. Sakane, Mr. Ishizuka and Mrs. Vanessa Abou Khalil were the speakers.

Mr. Koji SAKANE, Senior Director, Office for Peacebuilding and Reconstruction, Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA).

Mr. Sakane, Director for Peacebuilding and Reconstruction of JICA, brought up the concept of fragility as a way to look at peacebuilding and global governance more critically. He discussed multiple angles of fragility as a long term solution towards tackling internal and international conflicts. He made a link between fragility and the 2018 Global Terrorism Index findings highlighting how factors such as low economic conditions of a state, employment opportunities, trust in the government as the main motivation for joining terrorism efforts. Therefore, resilient state building and fragility as a concept itself must be further explored.

Mr. Kasumi ISHIZUKA, Professor, Kyoritsu University

Then, the session proceeded with Professor Ishizuka from Kyoritsu University who discussed the case study of Ireland in the context of UNIFL (UN Interim Force in Lebanon). He shared his findings from his fieldwork, which dealt with Ireland's response to the United Nations peacekeeping operations within UNIFL in South Lebanon. Historically, there were a number of clashes between Israeli-related forces and Irish soldiers in UNIFL. However, findings suggested institutional and normative rationales were significantly identified in the Irish contingent with a variety of motivating for participating in UNIFL. Overall though, he makes a strong case that theory has and will continue to evolve yet context cannot be left ignored.

Vanessa Abou Khali, Ph.D. Student Kobe University

Lastly, we had a presentation by Mrs. Vanessa Abou-Khalil from Kobe University who discussed Japan, Iran and United States. She presented an analysis of policies from Japan towards Iran during Iran-U.S conflict from 1979 until today. In her findings she highlighted dependency, interest, and value systems among states to be key factors for further consideration referencing oil as a resource, and the Iran-U.S tensions within the context of the hostage crisis in 1979. The role Japan can play to bring both U.S and Iran much closer on the premise of values is a layer for further exploration. Her presentation was key towards thinking about values, allies and the broader consequences of conflict into perspective. In conclusion, all presentations brought up themes of a multilateral approach, promotion of social cohesion, and the barrier of defying definitions in the context of global governance as a whole. While theory and practice may seem distant at time, we cannot forget they are very interlinked in this discussion.

Following the presentations, Mr. Dong Liang, Assistant Professor, China Foreign Affairs University, Beijing and Mr. Ken INOUE, Senior Adviser on Democratic Governance, JICA, provided their comments.

Assistant Professor and Research Fellow, Institute of Asian Studies, China Foreign Affairs University, Beijing, PR China. Dr. Dong received his Ph.D from Peking University on International Politics. He was an academic guest to ETH Zurich and the University of Zurich in 2015 in Switzerland. His main academic interests include Global Governance, the Interaction between Politics and Science, Climate Change Negotiations. He teaches international organizations and global governance in China Foreign Affairs University and the University of Chinese Academy of Social Sciences. Dr. Dong has published 2 books and more 30 articles in major journals in areas like international relations, environment management and public health domestically and abroad. He is also a scientific editor for the Chinese Journal of Population, Resources and Environment.

Dong LIANG, Assistant Professor, China Foreign Affairs University, Beijing

Ken INOUE, Senior Adviser on Democratic Governance, JICA

Mr. Ken Inoue is Senior Advisor on Democratic Governance of Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA). He served various the UN Peacekeeping operations as Director of Democratic Governance Support Unit of UNMIT (Timor-Leste), Municipal Administrator of UNMIK (Kosovo), Regional Humanitarian Affairs Officer of UNOSOM II (Somalia), and Deputy Provincial Director of UNTAC (Cambodia). He also worked with Asian Productivity Organization in Tokyo, UN Volunteers in Geneva and Bonn, UN Cambodian Humanitarian Assistance Programme in Bangkok, UNDP in Trinidad & Tobago and World Bank in Washington DC. He is also Member of UNITAR Advisory Board on PKO Training Programme and Supporting Member of Amnesty International Japan. He graduated from Waseda University (Political Science) and IDS, Sussex University (Development Studies). Mr. Inoue is a member of the Academic Council on the UN System (ACUNS).

This summary record is compiled by Ms. Elizabeth Gamarra, Rotary Fellow, ICU, who acted as the rapporteur of the thematic session.

➤ Thematic session 3 “Possibility for Constitutional Reform of the United Nations Charter”

Coordinator/Moderator: Takahiro SHINYO, Professor, Former Ambassador to the United Nations and Germany

Presenters:

S.M. SHAREI, Executive Director of the Center for United Nations Constitutional Research, Brussels

ZHANG Guihong, Director, Center for UN Studies, Fudan University, Shanghai

Discussants:

Vesselin POPOVSKI, Professor and Vice Dean, Jindal Global Law School, O.P. Jindal Global University, Haryana, India

Sukehiro HASEGAWA, Executive Director for Academic Exchange, UN Association of Japan

Rapporteur: Amishi AGRAWAL, University of Tokyo

Professor Takahiro SHINYO, Former Ambassador to the United Nations and Germany

The moderator of the thematic session on the “Possibility for Constitutional Reform of the United Nations Charter,” Professor Takahiro SHINYO, Former Ambassador to the United Nations and Germany explained that the session was convened to examine the possibility for a fundamental reform of the UN. He then introduced the two presenters, Dr. S.M. SHAREI, Executive Director of the Center for United Nations Constitutional Research, Brussels, and Professor ZHANG Guihong, Director, Center for UN Studies, Fudan University, Shanghai. The moderator informed the participants that Dr. Vesselin POPOVSKI, Professor and Vice Dean, Jindal Global Law School, O.P. Jindal Global University, Haryana, India and Professor Sukehiro HASEGAWA, Executive Director for Academic Exchange, UN Association of Japan will comment on the presentations. Ms. Amishi AGRAWAL, University of Tokyo, acted as a rapporteur.

The first presenter, Dr.S.M. Sharei, Director of the Center for UN Constitutional Research, in Brussels, introduced the San Francisco Promise reflected in Article 109 of the Charter and advocated a charter reform as the most viable method for reforming the UN. Further, based on Paragraph3 of Art. 109, Sharei explained the legislative history of the opposition to the security council formation in 1945, and the legal adoption of Article 109(3), in 1955, based on GA Resolution 992(X) and its subsequent adoption at the Security Council despite negative vote of one of its P5 members. Explaining that how veto does not apply on convening of a review conference and based on precedence, how even at the ratification it might be overturned.

Sharei argued, based on the successful adoption of Article 109(3), on legal grounds, that the P5 members of the Security Council by not upholding the “San Francisco Promise” are in breach of the UN Charter. He further argued that why substantive and effective UN and Security Council reforms should only be considered in the legitimate forum which the Charter has prescribed as constitutional and binding, which is that of the Review process

Next, Dr. Zhang proposed replacing the Trusteeship Council with the Human Rights Council or refurbishing it by giving it the mandate to coordinate global governance. The Trusteeship Council (TC) is one of six Charter organs. The TC has suspended its operations since 1994 when the last trust territory (Palau) became independence and joined the UN. There are two options to reform or transform the TC. Option one is to replace the TC by Human Rights Council (HRC). With the promotion of UN Secretary-General Kofi Annan, the human right has been one of the three pillars of the UN. Considering the importance of human rights and the status of HRC, it is better to upgrade the HRC from General Assembly to the Charter organ to replace TC which has finished its functions for 25 years. Option 2 is to transform the TC with new functions. Based on its universality, representativeness and authority, the UN is the best platform for the global governance of global commons, including Oceans, Polar Regions, cyber space, and outer space. Actually, UN has some kinds of institutions, treaties, resolutions as well as rules and norms, to govern global commons. But there is no Charter organ to lead and integrate these governances. The TC can take this responsibility after its transformation.

Vesselin POPOVSKI, Professor and Vice Dean, Jindal Global Law School, O.P. Jindal Global University,
Haryana, India

The first discussant, Dr. Popovski recommended remodeling the UN to respond to three existential threats - climate change, nuclear weapons and artificial intelligence. He strongly supported an Art. 109 charter review, as presented by Dr. Sharei, but if this appears difficult in short-term, he proposed elevating the Peace Building Commission into a Peace Building Council, and establishing and empowering a Global Environmental Agency, to unify the existing climate-related UN bodies. Popovski also appealed for a bigger role of the General Assembly in peace and security, in climate change and in selecting future Secretaries-General.

Finally, Dr. Hasegawa suggested amalgamating the Security Council with the current G-20, aimed at reconstituting the SC reflect the current power composition of the world. He explained it would give not only legitimacy to the G-20 group but also a realistic decision-making power to the Security Council of the United Nations that are needed in addressing and resolving the conflict.

United Nations Charter Article 109

- 1. General Conference of the Members of the United Nations for the purpose of reviewing the present Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members of the Security Council. Each Member of the United Nations shall have one vote in the conference.
- 2. Any alteration of the present Charter recommended by a two-thirds vote of the conference shall take effect when ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the Members of the United Nations including all the permanent members of the Security Council.
- 3. If such a conference has not been held before the tenth annual session of the General Assembly following the coming into force of the present Charter, the proposal to call such a conference shall be placed on the agenda of that session of the General Assembly, and the conference shall be held if so decided by a majority vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council.

The participants then engaged in discussion, bringing up themes such as the past attempts for UN charter reform and the possibility of two actors - China and the civil society - playing a leading role in such attempts now.

➤ Thematic session 4 (Language: Japanese (English comments possible without an interpreter))
“UN System’s Public Policy and Governance for Peace Building Activities”

Coordinator: Setsuko YAMAZAKI, Specially Appointed Professor at the Graduate School of Advanced Integrated Studies in Human Survivability, Kyoto University

Presenters:

Kotaro KATSUKI, Counsellor, International Peace Cooperation Headquarters,
Cabinet Office

Koji SAKANE, Senior Director, Office for Peacebuilding and Reconstruction, Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA).

Tadanori INOMATA, Former Ambassador of Japan to Costa Rica and Strategic Advisor, Nagasaki University

Discussants:

Ippeita NISHIDA, Senior Research Fellow of the International Peace and Security Department of Sasakawa Peace Foundation (SPF)

Fujiko AMANO, Lawyer, formerly UNODC

Rapporteur: Fujiko AMANO

Coordinator: Setsuko YAMAZAKI, Specially Appointed Professor at the Graduate School of Advanced Integrated Studies in Human Survivability, Kyoto University and Tadanori INOMATA, Former Ambassador of Japan to Costa Rica and Strategic Advisor, Nagasaki University

The session, organized by Ambassador Inomata and moderated by Professor Yamazaki, examined UN public policy and roles of state and non-state stakeholders in global governance for peace activities. The participants heard the presentations made by Messrs Katsuki and Sakane and comments made by Messrs Inomata, Nishida, Amano as well as Mr. Noguchi.

Kotaro KATSUKI, Counsellor, International Peace Cooperation Headquarters, Cabinet Office

Mr. Katsuki advocated SDG-based global governance for sustaining peace to which Japan contributes through capacity development of peacebuilders of developing countries including engineering as well as protection of women.

Koji SAKANE, Senior Director, Office for Peacebuilding and Reconstruction, Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA)

Mr. Sakane focused on a complementary role of non-UN actors such as regional organizations in sustaining peace, the use of 3D approach and the lack of an anchor in international relations and peace operations.

Professor Tadanori INOMATA, Strategic Advisor of Nagasaki University

Ambassador Inomata analyzed how security, sustainable development, and human rights can be integrated into global governance through common strategic planning in UN system's operations based on the Sendai Disaster Prevention Model to foster resilience against all hazards.

Fujiko AMANO, Lawyer, formerly UNODC staff

Mr. Nishida and Ms. Amano added private sector perspectives on involvement of Japan and business into sustaining peace.

Ippeita NISHIDA, Senior Research Fellow of the International Peace and Security Department of Sasakawa Peace Foundation (SPF) and Mr. Noguchi, former Director of UNESCO

Finally, Mr. Noguchi commented how UNESCO can enhance culture of peace through its educational initiatives. Noguchi then mentioned an interesting event called “Children’s Performing Art Festival of East Asia” which had been held 10 times in various cities of China, Mongolia, DPR Korea, Republic of Korea, and Japan.

Dr. Herman Salton, PhD, is an Associate Professor of International Relations at the International Christian University in Tokyo, Japan

Dr. Kihara-Hunt and Mr. Raymond Andaya of the University of Tokyo spoke on rising powers’ attitudes towards human rights and impunity in conflict management. In absence of an agreed definition for ‘rising powers’, the speakers’ definition was that they do not insist on particular norms but remain flexible, guided by their self-interest and other States’ expectations, e.g. Brazil, India, South Africa, Indonesia and Mexico. Their use of human rights in diplomacy is characterized by neither denial or coherence use but rather flexible use of human rights, with mixed trend in the use of human rights in intervention, while their internal performance of human rights is mixed, with a general tendency, but with exceptions, to struggle to protect democratic rights. The contention of this presentation was that flexibility towards human rights is a product of reluctant attitude. There are two constitutive dimensions to reluctance: hesitation and recalcitrance. There is a ‘relational aspect’ to these dimensions. Hesitation (in domestic policies) affects the ability to conform to competing international expectations, while witnessing or supporting agreements with amnesty provisions is evidence of recalcitrance. Conflict management for rising powers happens in the context of the difficulty of straddling between competing international expectations related to peace/justice.

Ai KIHARA-HUNT, Associate Professor, University of Tokyo, and Mayumi Yamada made her presentation on the implications of the peace process in South Sudan.

According to her, the Republic of South Sudan, the newest country, is going through fragile peace processes: peace-making, peacekeeping, peacebuilding, and peace-enforcement. The country has experienced all stages/processes of peace, uniquely, with the United Nations (UN), Intergovernmental Authority on Development and African Union. Fragile peace processes of South Sudan indicate three issues at least:

(1) So many peace agreements have been made, starting from Comprehensive Peace Agreement (2005), IGAD-led compromised PA (2015), Formation of the Transition Government of National Unity (2016) to Khartoum Declaration (2018). A large number of peace agreements exist, but not implemented or need to be revitalized. The critiques are how many peace agreements are needed, why these agreements are not respected. (2) After the South Sudan Crisis (2013), UNMISS mandate was changed from State Building (SB) to Protection of Civilians (PoC). The UN should strategically support both SB and PoC: UN Mission and UN Humanitarian/Development Country Teams should make PoC “a function of the state”. (3) Challenge of Governance is “National Unity”. The origin of 2013 Crisis started from fights between the “private” security guards of the president and the national security guards. Peacebuilding is trust building. The president needs to trust and work with the national guards comprising from different tribes rather than foreign security forces (e.g. Uganda).

Dr. Mayumi Yamada is Assistant Professor of Peacekeeping Operations and Humanitarian-Development at Ritsumeikan University

Presentation: “Humanitarian Intervention in Nation- Building: Kosovo case from 1998-2017” Humanitarian interventions have been a controversial topic for a long time. As one of the youngest countries in southeastern Europe, Kosovo declared its independence in 2008, disputing its own territory from Serbia. The origin of the political and territorial conflict between Kosovo and Serbia dates the fact that it was an emergency situation led by Serbian forces on one side and there was the duty to intervene on the other. Many attempts by many authors such as Allen and Terry made the case significant where they try to explain humanitarian intervention as a mixture in the case of Kosovo where the intervention clumsily affected other countries in recognition of Kosovo’s independence, such as Chinese Embassy in Belgrade. Many scholars that have witnessed the effects of the humanitarian intervention in the case of Kosovo, believe that China has a reason to fear the U.S. presence in Asia in the near future, based on the intervention, they are always described as military forces intervention””. The NATO intervention in Kosovo is considered as interference for political interests, aiming to ensure that Serbia will withdraw its troops from Kosovo’s territory. Both NATO and the UN failed to reach peacekeeping bearings within two ethnicities. The overriding concern of the international community to intervene has turned out to be a pretext to take the attention, power and, last but not least, a territory under its control. Apart from that, a very profound challenge for the future is the global aspect. For instance, how issues such as intervention will undertake nations globally not individually, and whether international law should permit states to intervene in order to prevent a conflict.

Professor Yunmi CHOI, PhD, a Research Fellow at the Center for Military Strategy of the Research Institute for National Security Affairs (RINSA) of the Korean National Defense University (KNDU) sent her best wishes to the successful undertaking of the Tokyo Peacebuilding forum 2019, as her participation was cancelled at the last moment due to her official engagement in Seoul. She explained that South Korea now has several hundred peacekeepers deployed in UN peacekeeping missions in Africa. Korea tries to keep at least two fully-organized units deployed on UN missions (currently an engineering unit serves in UNMISS and a mechanized infantry unit serves in UNIFIL). It currently provides over 600 UN peacekeepers, although its contribution peaked at 760 troops in July 2012.

In 1988 through 1990, he was a visiting professor at School of Advanced International Studies of Johns Hopkins University in the United States and University College of Oxford University from 2005 to 2015.

Ambassador Yasuyoshi KOMIZO

In his presentation, Ambassador Komizo mentioned that “Hibakusha,” Atomic bomb survivors of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, are fervently appealing for the realization of peaceful world without nuclear weapons in their conviction that “no one else shall ever again suffer as we have”. This is rooted on the same awakening of UNESCO Constitution in its preamble that “since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that defences of peace must be constructed”. It is at the core of “Culture of Peace”. If we can nurture the shared awareness that we all belong to one human family, we can appreciate diversity and secure incentive to settle disputes peacefully, Mayors for Peace with 7,800 member cities, works for realizing nuclear weapons’ free world focusing on awareness raising of nuclear danger, elimination of nuclear weapons, and promoting mutual understanding and cooperation worldwide. It also emphasizes the need to transform “confrontational security” typically represented by nuclear deterrence into “cooperative security”, a scheme that promote mutual trust This work require collaboration between political leadership and a wide ranging civil society partners working together to cultivate, through dialogue, a better foundation for mutual trust transcending differences in culture, religion, and skin colors.

Tomokiyo Tanaka, Councilor, Jinja-Honcho, Visiting Professor, Kyoto University of Arts and Design, Fellow, Kokoro Research Center of Kyoto University, Fellow, Institute of Japanese Culture of Kyoto Sangyo University and Secretary-General, Japan Religious Committee for World Federation

Mr. Tanaka introduced the meaning of "A Prayer for Eternal World Peace." This is a prayer which our inter-denominational Japan Religious Committee for World Federation, formed from representatives of many Japanese religious sects, has maintained now for fifty-two (52) years. I also talked about the "Cooperative Construction of Eternal World Peace as a Basic Value" and the "Creation of Love, Respect, and Trust Between Human Beings," which have always played a central role in our various activities, and further, explain how important an element these are for the ongoing promotion of SDGs by the United Nations. He indicated that the Japanese do not place stress on a single particular "religion" and pay their respects in some form at shrines, temples, and other places of worship. It reflects the spirituality of the Japanese, who are not at all caught up in "religion" per se but are at the same time full of "faith" in the spirituality of human beings.

According to him, the most important task before the peoples of the Earth now is to build, through dialogue and unstinting effort, a system of values in which "Eternal World Peace" is at the very center, and to nurture mutual respect, love, and trust between all human beings. In this way, we can bring about a peaceful society and a society of co-existence and co-prosperity which cares for all its members and enables sustainable development. In such a society, people of all nations, ethnicities, cultures, and religions can live together on Mother Earth with good cheer, happiness, and health, as members of a single family. Even more importantly, it is essential that mutual respect, love and trust not only be nurtured between all human beings but that they also be, like love and friendship, sustained and developed by the unstinting efforts of all people on Earth. He then suggested that the United Nations move forward vigorously for the sake of the effective promotion of SDGs, and with a view towards realizing a world of co-existence and co-prosperity for all humankind. Specifically, he proposed that there should be established a Standing Committee of the United Nations. This Committee would be made up of people chosen from every sphere of society, such as industry, government, the arts and sciences, private citizens, culture, religion and so on. Their task would be the "Cooperative building of a system of values centered around eternal world peace" with, as its unmoving foundation, the "Nurturing and sustaining of mutual respect, love, and trust among all the peoples of Earth"

Professor Min WANG, Hosei University Center for International Japan-Studies

Professor Min WANG works in comparative cultural studies with special emphasis on East Asia, including Japan and China. Her research investigates how Yu the Great, a China legendary ruler, became the tutelary deity of many Japanese villages, and what Chinese revolutionary leaders learned from their experiences of studying in Japan as overseas students. Her recent publications include "Yu the Great and Japan" and "Zhou Enlai in Arashiyama".

She is also a councilor of the National Art Center, Tokyo, and a member of the Peace Practice Forum. In 2009, she was honored by Commissioner for Agency for Cultural Affairs. Ms. Wang Min said that before returning to China, Zhou Enlai visited Arashiyama Mountain in Kyoto in 1919 and wrote a poem known as Raining Arashiyama. The reason he visited Arashiyama on a rainy day was most likely that he wanted to learn more about Suminokura Ryōi, the Japanese Yu the Great. This trip had a significant impact on China's policy toward Japan afterwards.

Dr. YANG Yue, Deputy Director & Associate Professor, Institute of Asian Studies, China Foreign Affairs University, and Member of Chinese Association of Asia-Pacific Studies
