Ms. Carolina LARRIERA

Ms. Larriera is a former UN staff member and a survivor of the Baghdad bombing that killed then SRSG Sergio de Mello. She has many years of experience working with the United Nations, at its headquarters in New York and on UN peace-keeping missions in the field. In Timor-Leste, she was involved in the development of nascent government institutions and their consequent transformation into full-fledged ministries.

Ms. Larriera is an economist with significant working experience in think tanks, economic consulting, and international partnership. She holds a bachelor's degree in economics from the City University of New York and holds master's degrees from the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy and the John F. Kennedy School, Harvard University, where she has taught as an assistant professor.
